To the Author of the LONDON JOURNAL.

SIR,

HAve ſhewn in a late Paper, wherein conſiſts the Difference between free and arbitrary Governments, as to their Frame and Conſtitution; and in this and the following, I ſhall ſhew their different Spirit and Effects. But firſt I will ſhew wherein Liberty it ſelf conſiſts.

By Liberty, I underſtand the Power which every Man has over his own Actions, and his Right to enjoy the Fruits of his Labour, Art and Induſtry, as far as by it he hurts not the Society, or any Members of it, by taking from any Member, or by hindering him from enjoying what he himſelf enjoys. The Fruits of a Man's honeſt Induſtry are the juſt Rewards of it, aſcertain'd to him by natural and eternal Equity, as is his Title to uſe them in the Manner he thinks fit; and thus with the above Limitations, every Man is ſole Lord and Arbiter of his own private Actions and Property—— a Character of which no Man living can diveſt him but by Uſurpation, or his own Conſent.

The entring into political Society is ſo far from a Departure from this Natural Right, that to preſerve it was the ſole Reaſon why Men did ſo; and mutual Protection and Aſſiſtance is the only reaſonable Purpoſe of all reaſonable Societies. To make ſuch Protection practicable, Magiſtracy was form'd with Power to defend the Innocent from Violence, and to puniſh thoſe that offer'd it; nor can there be any other Pretence for Magiſtracy in the World: In order to this good End, the Magiſtrate is intruſted with conducting and applying the united Force of the Community, and with exacting ſuch a Share of every Man's Property, as is neceſſary to preſerve the Whole, and to defend every Man and his Property from foreign and domeſtick Injuries. Theſe are Bounds of the Power of the Magiſtrate, who deſerts his Function whenever he breaks them. By the Laws of Society he is more limited and reſtrained than any Man amongſt them; ſince, while they are abſolutely free in all their Actions, which purely concern themſelves; all his Actions, as a publick Perſon, being for the Sake of the Society, muſt refer to it, and anſwer the Ends of it.

It is a miſtaken Notion in Government, that the Intereſt of the Majority is only to be conſulted, ſince in Society every Man has a Right to every Man's Aſſiſtance in the Enjoyment and Defence of his private Property; otherwiſe the greater Number may ſell the leſſer, and divide their Eſtates amongſt themſelves; and ſo inſtead of a Society, where all peaceable Men are protected, become a Conſpiracy of the Many againſt the Minority: With as much Equity may one Man wilfully diſpoſe of all, and Violence may be ſanctified by meer Power.

And it is as fooliſh to ſay, that Government is concern'd to meddle with the private Thoughts and Actions of Men, while they injure by neither the Society or any of its Members. Every Man is in Nature and Reaſon the Judge and Diſpoſer of his own domeſtick Affairs; and according to the Rules of Religion and Equity, every Man muſt carry his own Conſcience. So that neither has the Magiſtrate a Right to direct the private Behaviour of Men; nor has the Magiſtrate, or any Body elſe, any Manner of Power to model People's Speculations, no more than their Dreams. Government being intended to protect Men from the Injuries of one another, and not to direct them in their own Affairs, in which no one is intereſted but themſelves; it is plain, that their Thoughts and domeſtick Concerns are exempted entirely from its Juriſdiction: In truth, Mens Thoughts are not ſubject to their own Juriſdiction.

Idiots and Lunaticks indeed, who cannot take care of themſelves, muſt be taken care of by others: But whilſt Men have their five Senſes, I cannot ſee what the Magiſtrate has to do with Actions by which the Society cannot be affected; and where he does meddle with ſuch, he does it impertinently or tyrannically. Muſt the Magiſtrate tye up every Man's Legs, becauſe ſome Men fall into Ditches? or, muſt he put out their Eyes, becauſe ſuch as them they ſee lying Vanities? or, would it become the Wiſdom and Care of Governours to eſtabliſh a travelling Society, to prevent People by a proper Confinement from throwing themſelves into Wells or over Precipices? or to endow a Fraternity of Phyſicians and Surgeons all over the Nation, to take care of their Subjects Health, without being conſulted; and to vomit, bleed, purge and ſcarify them at Pleaſure, whether they would or no, juſt as they ſhould think fit? If this were the caſe, what a ſtir and hubbub ſhould we ſoon ſee kept about the eſtabliſh'd Potions and Lancets; every Man, Woman and Child, tho' ever ſo healthy, muſt be a Patient, or woe be to them! The beſt Diet and Medicines would ſoon grow pernicious from any other Hand; and their Pills alone, however ridiculous, inſufficient, or diſtaſteful, would be attended with a Bleſſing.

Let People alone and they will take care of themſelves, and do it beſt; and if they do not, a ſufficient Puniſhment will follow their Neglect without the Magiſtrate's Interpoſition and Penalties. It is plain that ſuch buſy Care and officious Intruſion into the perſonal Affairs, or private Actions, Thoughts and Imaginations of Men, has in it more Craft than Kindneſs, and is only a Device to miſlead People, and pick their Pockets, under the falſe Pretence of the publick and their private Good. To quarrel with any Man for his Opinions, Humours, or the Faſhion of his Cloths, is an Offence taken without being given. What is it to the Magiſtrate how I waſh my Hands, or cut my Corns, what Faſhion or Colours I wear, or what Notions I entertain, or what Geſtures I uſe, or what Words I pronounce, when they pleaſe me, and do him and my Neighbour no hurt? As well may he determine the Colour of my Hair, and controul my Shape and Features.

True and impartial Liberty is therefore the Right of every Man to purſue the natural, reaſonable and religious Dictates of his own Mind; to think what he will, and act as he thinks, provided he acts not to the Prejudice of another; to ſpend his own Money himſelf, and lay out the Produce of his Labour his own Way; and to labour for his own Pleaſure and Profit, and not for others who are idle, and would live and riot by pillaging and oppreſſing him, and thoſe that are like him.

So that Civil Government is only a partial Reſtraint put by the Laws of Agreement and Society upon natural and abſolute Liberty, which might otherwiſe grow licentious: And Tyranny is an unlimited Reſtraint put upon natural Liberty, by the Will of one or a few. Magiſtracy amongſt a free People is the Exerciſe of Power for the ſake of the People; and Tyrants abuſe the People, for the ſake of Power. Free Government is the protecting the People in their Liberties by ſtated Rules; Tyranny is a brutiſh Struggle for unlimited Liberty in one or a few, who would rob all others of their Liberty, and act by no Rule but Lawleſs Luſt.

(Price Three Half-pence.)

So much for an Idea of Civil Liberty. I will now add a Word or two to ſhew how much it is the Delight and Paſſion of Mankind, and then ſhew its Advantages.

The Love of Liberty is an Appetite ſo ſtrongly implanted in the Nature of all living Creatures, that even the Appetite of Self-preſervation, which is allowed to be the ſtrongeſt, ſeems to be contained in it; ſince by the Means of Liberty they enjoy the Means of preſerving themſelves, and of ſatisfying their Deſires, in the Manner which they themſelves chuſe and like beſt. Many Animals can never be tamed, but feel the Bitterneſs of Reſtraint in the midſt of the kindeſt Uſage, and rather than bear it, grieve or ſtarve themſelves to Death; and ſome beat out their Brains againſt their Priſons.

Where Liberty is loſt, Life grows precarious, always miſerable, and often intolerable. Liberty is to live upon one's own Terms; Slavery is to live at the meer Mercy of another; and a Life of Slavery is to thoſe who can bear it, a continual State of Uncertainty and Wretchedneſs, often an Apprehenſion of Violence, and often the lingring Dread of a violent Death: But by others, when no other Remedy is to be had, Death is reckon'd a good one. And thus to many Men, and to many other Creatures as well as Men, the Love of Liberty is beyond the Love of Life.

This Paſſion for Liberty in Men and their Poſſeſſion of it, is of that Efficacy and Importance, that it ſeems the Parent of all the Virtues: And therefore in free Countries there ſeems to be another Species of Mankind, than is to be found under Tyrants. Small Armies of Greeks and Romans deſpis'd the greateſt Hoſts of Slaves; and a Million of Slaves have been ſometimes beaten and conquer'd by a few Thouſand Freemen. Inſomuch, that the Difference ſeem'd greater between them than between Men and Sheep. It was therefore well ſaid by Lucullus, when, being about to engage the great King Tigranes's Army, he was told by ſome of his Officers, how prodigious great the ſame was, conſiſting of between Three and Four Hundred Thouſand Men: No matter, ſaid that brave Roman, drawing up his little Army of fourteen Thouſand, but fourteen Thouſand Romans: No matter; the Lion never enquires into the Number of the Sheep. And their Royal Troops proved no better; for the Romans had little elſe to do but to kill and purſue: which yet they could ſcarce do for Laughing, ſo much more were they diverted than animated by the ridiculous Dread and ſudden Flight of theſe Imperial Slaves and Royal Cowards.

Men eternally cowed and oppreſs'd by haughty and inſolent Governours, made baſe themſelves by the Baſeneſs of that ſort of Government, and become Slaves by ruling over Slaves; want Spirit and Souls to meet in the Field Free-men, who ſcorn Oppreſſors and are their own Governours, or at leaſt meaſure and direct the Power of their Governours.

Education alters Nature, and becomes ſtronger. Slavery, while it continues, being a perpetual Awe upon the Spirits, depreſſes them, and ſinks natural Courage: and Want and Fear, the Concomitants of Bondage, always produce Deſpondency and Baſeneſs: Nor will Men in Bonds ever fight bravely, but to be free. And indeed, what elſe ſhould they fight for; ſince every Victory they gain for a Tyrant, makes them poorer and fewer; and, increaſing his Pride, increaſes his Cruelty, and their own Miſery and Chains?

Thoſe, who from Terror and Deluſion, the frequent Cauſes and certain Effects of Servitude, come to think their Governours greater than Men, as they find them worſe; will be as apt to think themſelves leſs: And when the Head and the Heart are thus both gone, the Hands will ſignify little; they who are us'd like Beaſts, will be apt to degenerate into Beaſts. But thoſe, on the contrary, who by the Freedom of their Government and Education, are taught and accuſtom'd to think freely of Men and Things, find, by comparing one Man with another, that all Men are naturally alike; and that their Governours, as they have the ſame Face, Conſtitution, and Shape with themſelves, and are ſubject to the ſame Sickneſs, Accidents and Death with the meaneſt of their People; ſo they poſſeſs the ſame Paſſions and Faculties of the Mind which their Subjects poſſeſs, and not better. They therefore ſcorn to degrade and proſtrate themſelves, to adore thoſe of their own Species, however cover'd with Titles and diſguis'd by Power: They conſider them as their own Creatures; and, as far as they ſurmount themſelves, the Work of their own Hands, and only the chief Servants of the State, who have no more Power to do Evil than one of themſelves, and are void of every Privilege and Superiority, but to ſerve them and their State. They know it is a Contradiction in Religion and Reaſon, for any Man to have a Right to do Evil; and that not to reſiſt any Man's Wickedneſs, is to encourage it; and that they have the leaſt Reaſon to bear Evil and Oppreſſion from their Governours, who of all Men are the moſt oblig'd to do them good. They therefore deteſt Slavery, and deſpiſe or pity Slaves; and adoring Liberty alone, as they who ſee its Beauty and feel its Advantages always will, 'tis no wonder they are brave for it.

Indeed Liberty is the divine Source of all human Happineſs. To poſſeſs, in ſecurity, the Effects of our Induſtry, is the moſt powerful and reaſonable Incitement to be induſtrious: And to be able to provide for our Children, and leave them all that we have, is the beſt Motive to beget them. But where Property is precarious, Labour will languiſh. The Privileges of thinking, ſaying and doing what we pleaſe, and of growing as rich as we can, without any other Reſtriction, than that by all this we hurt not the Publick nor one another, are the glorious Privileges of Liberty; and its Effects, to live in Freedom, Plenty and Safety.

Theſe are Privileges that increaſe Mankind, and the Happineſs of Mankind. And therefore Countries are generally peopled in Proportion as they are free, and are certainly happy in that Proportion: And upon the ſame Tract of Land that would maintain a Hundred Thouſand Freemen in Plenty, Five Thouſand Slaves would ſtarve. In Italy, fertile Italy, Men die ſometimes of Hunger amongſt the Sheaves, and in a plentiful Harveſt; for what they ſow and reap is none of their own; and their cruel and greedy Governours, who live by the Labour of their wretched Vaſſals, do not ſuffer them to eat the Bread of their own Earning, nor to ſuſtain their Lives with their own Hands.

Liberty naturally draws new People to it, as well as encreaſes the old Stock; and Men as naturally run when they dare from Slavery and Wretchedneſs, wherefoever they can help themſelves. Hence great Cities loſing their Liberty become Deſarts, and little Towns by Liberty grow great Cities; as will be fully proved before I have gone through this Argument. I will not deny, but that there are ſome great Cities of Slaves: But ſuch are only imperial Cities, and the Seats of great Princes, who draw the Wealth of a Continent to their Capital, the Center of their Treaſure and Luxury. Babylon, Antioch, Selencia and Alexandria, were great Cities peopled by Tyrants, but peopled partly by Force, partly by the above Reaſon, and partly by Grants and Indulgences. Their Power, great and boundleſs as it was, could not alone people their Cities; but they were forced to ſoften Authority by Kindneſs; and having brought the Inhabitants together by Force, and by driving them Captive like Cattle, could not keep them together without beſtowing on them many Privileges to encourage the firſt Inhabitants to ſtay, and to invite more to come.

This was a Confeſſion in thoſe Tyrants, that their Power was miſchievous and unjuſt; ſince they could not erect one great City, and make it flouriſh, without renouncing in a great Meaſure their Power over it; which by granting it theſe Privileges, in Effect they did. Theſe Privileges were fixt Laws, by which the Trade and Induſtry of the Citizens was encourag'd, and their Lives and Property aſcertain'd and protected, and no longer ſubjected to the Law of meer Will and Pleaſure: And therefore while theſe free Cities, enjoying their own Liberties and Laws, flouriſh'd under them, the Provinces were miſerably haraſs'd, pillag'd, diſpeopled and impoveriſh'd, and the Inhabitants exhauſted, ſtarved, butcher'd and carried away Captive.

This ſhews that all civil Happineſs and Proſperity is inſeparable from Liberty; and that Tyranny cannot make Men, or Societies of Men happy, without departing from its Nature, and giving them Privileges inconſiſtent with Tyranny. And here is an unanſwerable Argument amongſt a Thouſand others, againſt abſolute Power in a ſingle Man. Nor is there one way in the World to give Happineſs to Communities, but by ſheltering them under certain and expreſs Laws, irrevocable at any Man's Pleaſure.

There is not, nor can be, any Security for a People to truſt to the meer Will of one, who, while his Will is his Law, cannot protect them if he would. The Number of Sycophants and wicked Counſellors, that he will always and neceſſarily have about him, will defeat all his good Intentions, by repreſenting Things falſly, and Perſons maliciouſly; by ſuggeſting Danger where it is not, and urging Neceſſity where there is none; by filling their own Coffers under Colour of filling his, and by raiſing Money for themſelves, pretending the publick Exigencies of the State; by ſacrificing particular Men to their own Revenge, under pretence of publick Security; and by engaging him and his People in dangerous and deſtructive Wars, for their own Profit or Fame; by throwing publick Affairs into perpetual Confuſion, to prevent an Enquiry into their own Behaviour; and by making him jealous of his People, and his People of him, on purpoſe to manage and miſlead both Sides.

By all theſe and many more wicked Arts, they will be conſtantly leading him into cruel and oppreſſive Meaſures, deſtructive to his People, and ſcandalous and dangerous to himſelf, but entirely agreeable to their own Spirit and Deſigns.

Thus

Thus will they commit all Wickedneſs by their Maſter's Authority againſt his Inclinations, and grow rich by the People's Poverty, without his Knowledge; and the Royal Authority will be firſt a Warrant for Oppreſſion, and afterwards a Protection from the Puniſhment due to it. For in ſhort, the Power of Princes is often little elſe but a ſtalking Horſe to the Intrigues and Ambition of their Miniſters.

But if the Diſpoſition of ſuch a Prince be evil, what muſt be the forlorn Condition of his People, and what Door of Hope can remain for common Protection! The beſt Princes have often evil Counſellours, and the bad will have no other: And in ſuch a Caſe, what Bounds can be ſet to their Fury, and the Havock they will make? The Inſtruments and Adviſers of Tyranny and Depredation always thrive beſt and are neareſt their Ends, when Depredation and Tyranny run higheſt: When moſt is plundered from the People, their ſhare is greateſt; we may therefore ſuppoſe every Evil will befal ſuch a People, without ſuppoſing extravagantly. No Happineſs, no Security, but certain Miſery, and a vile and precarious Life, are the bleſſed Terms of ſuch a Government——— A Government which neceſſarily introduces all Evils, and from the ſame Neceſſity neither muſt nor can redreſs any.

The Nature of his Education, bred up as he ever is in perpetual Flattery, makes him Haughty and Ignorant; and the Nature of his Government, which ſubſiſts by brutiſh Severity and Oppreſſion, makes him Cruel. He is unacceſſible, but by his Miniſters, whoſe Study and Intereſt will be to keep him from knowing or helping the State of his miſerable People. Their Maſter's Knowledge in his own Affairs, would break in upon their Scheme and Power; they are not likely to lay before him Repreſentations of Grievances caus'd by themſelves; nor, if they are the Effects of his own Barbarity and Command, will he hear them.

Even where abſolute Princes are not Tyrants, their Miniſters will be Tyrants. But it is indeed impoſſible for an Arbitrary Prince to be otherwiſe, ſince Oppreſſion is abſolutely neceſſary to his being ſo. Without giving his People Liberty, he cannot make them happy; and by giving them Liberty, he gives up his own Power. So that to be and continue Arbitrary, he is doom'd to be a Tyrant in his own Defence. The Oppreſſion of the People, Corruption, wicked Counſels and pernicious Maxims in the Court; and every where Baſeneſs, Ignorance and Chains, muſt ſupport Tyranny, or it cannot be ſupported. So that in ſuch Governments there are inevitable Grievances, without poſſible Redreſs; Miſery without Mitigation or Remedy; and whatever is good for the People, is bad for their Governours, and what is good for the Governours, is pernicious to the People.

I am, SIR, Your humble Servant,

CATO.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

ALL our Accounts of the Peſtilence are very favourable; and if we may believe them, it certainly declines rather than encreaſes; ſo that the Fear their Neighbours round them were under of its ſpreading, ſeems to be far leſs than it has at any Time been before.——They tell us now very poſitively from France, that the Congreſs of Cambray will be opened in a very little Time, and that all the publick Miniſters who are to aſſiſt at it, are hurrying away thither with the utmoſt Expedition. But how far this may be depended upon, Time only can ſhow us——We expect every Day to hear of the final Determination of the Turks, as to Peace or War with the Chriſtians. They have called a great Divan upon this important Article only; and as they ſhall conclude, the Repoſe of Europe will be continued or broke in upon.——The Spaniard, the Swede, the Muſcovite and Pole are at preſent very quiet, and ſeem diſpoſed to live ſo, at leaſt till a favourable Opportunity offers us to tempt them to break in upon the Tranquility they at preſent enjoy.

LONDON.

ON Sunday laſt a Negro Cook, who lived in Milford Lane, was interr'd at St. Clement Dane's; Six of his own Complexion ſupported the Pall, and no leſs than Sixty of the black Tribe follow'd the Corpſe, accompanied by One Hundred Fifty Six Whites.

Two Watermen, who ply at Bangerford ſtairs, on Saturday laſt rowed for a Wager of Eight Guineas, from the Old Swan to Chelſea; after which they fought for Two more, but the Challenger loſt both, and has been ſo box'd, that it is believed he will be ſcarce found wagering it any more.

We hear, that Mr. Law's Gentleman has frequently declared in publick Company here, that during the Blaze of his Maſter's Fortune in France, he got by way of free Gift, from the Nobility and Gentry of that Kingdom, about One Hundred Pounds a Week. And this ingenious Perſon adds, that he was conſulted by his Maſter upon divers Occaſions, in relation to the Grand Project, and always pronounced his Opinion with Succeſs and Applauſe. However it be, this worthy Gentleman has got a good Eſtate by it.

SIR,

THE following unfiniſh'd Copy of Verſes I found in the Scrutore of a Friend lately deceas'd, with this Memorandum, To be ſent to the Author of the London Journal I now perform what my departed Friend deſign'd, and beg the Favour of you, Sir, to give them that Place in your Paper, he was ambitious of obtaining for them; in complying with this Requeſt, you will in the higheſt Manner oblige your conſtant Reader and humble Servant, D. A.

To CATO.

WHILE Britain bleeds, with inbred Griefs, oppreſs'd;
While Foes, inteſtine, rend her ravag'd Breaſt;
While all her dear-bought Wreaths of Triumph fade,
And unavailing Olives bind her Head;
Permit, Great Man, a diſtant, unknown Muſe
To boaſt the Warmth thy wond'rous Lines infuſe;
Lines! whence ſucceeding Patriots ſhall be taught,
And future Cato's ripen into Thought.
Go on, O Studious for a thankleſs Age,
Point the juſt Satyr, and direct its Rage;
For Britain's Sake, reveal the Acts ſhe owns,
Unveil the Crimes of her ungrateful Sons.
Let the deſerving Few they Care demand,
And claim the generous Labours of thy Hand:
Stern Juſtice, let each awful Page diſcloſe,
And frown, vindictive, on thy Country's Foes.
How bright! how high! Britannia's Glory ſhone,
When Henry led her dauntleſs Squadrons on,
When Peace, fair Fugitive, the Heroe chaſed,
While Liberty each waving Standard grac'd;
When Fame immortal, o'er the brave Sedate,
Hung watchful to avert the flying Fate,
When at the Helm, by Thirſt of Wealth unbought,
The Statеſman council'd as the Warriour fought.
No Stamp, no Track of Acts like theſe remain,
Patriots have thought, and Heroes toil'd in vain.
O CATO! let theſe Scenes thy Pen engage,
Wake with theſe Views a vile degenerate Age.
Bid them reflect how oft this favour'd Iſle
Has felt the Warmth of Heaven's peculiar Smile;
With Glory loſt, each languid Soul inflame:
Tho' dead to Virtue, they may rouſe to Fame.

His Grace the Duke of Portland hath hired a Ship of about Four Hundred Tuns, for the carrying over his Baggage, &c. to Jamaica, and ſhe is obliged to ſail by the 10th of next Month, in order to join his Majeſty's Ship the Kingſton at Portſmouth, (on Board of which the Duke and Dutcheſs embark) from which Port they will ſail together; his Grace propoſing to be at his Government in the Beginning of April at fartheſt.

The Eaſt-India Company are entring of Soldiers for Five Years for their Service in India; they give each Man Three Pounds and Bedding, with other Encouragement.

The Directors of the South-Sea Company have received an Account from the Commander of their great Ship, the Royal George, dated from Maderas, that upon his Arrival at that Place he had diſcovered an intended Inſurrection among his Men, when they were over their Cups, which had obliged him to part with about Twenty or more of them, upon the Place, and to take in their ſtead others who had lately ſuffered Shipwreck on the adjacent Shores.

By our Paris Letters, we have an Account, that on the 12th of January a Lady of Pleaſure, who is about 18 Years Old, was brought to Bed of a Daughter, who had a kind of a natural Turbant round her Head, without Eyes, and inſtead of a Noſe, a croſs Slit: As for her Mouth, Hands, Feet, &c. they were ſhaped as they ſhould be, excepting that on each Hand ſhe had five Fingers and a Thumb; and on each Foot ſix Toes: The Child liv'd but two Days. 'Tis not known whether ſhe had any thing to do with the Turks, who were lately there, or whether the Sight of them made ſuch a ſtrange Impreſſion on her Fancy.

The Prayer of the Petitions from Weſtminſter, Kent, Surry, Southwark, &c. has been ſo far anſwered, that a Bill is ordered to be brought in for building a Bridge croſs the River Thames, from a Place called the Prince's Walk near Lambeth, to the oppoſite Shore in Weſtminſter.

As is alſo a Bill to prohibit the building Ships of Force in our Docks for the uſe of Foreigners.

On Thurſday the 13th Inſtant, the Silk Weavers and Mercers waited on their Royal Highneſſes the Prince and Princeſs, to implore their Favour and good Services for the Bill for making the Prohibition of all Eaſt-India Wrought Silks, &c. more effectual; who were received very favourably. The Princeſs particularly aſſured them, ſhe would incourage our own Silk Manufactures, and diſcountage all foreign Silks.

We hear the Lord Palmouth ſets out in Ten or Twelve Days Time for the Congreſs at Cambray, as Miniſter of State from his Britannick Majeſty.

William Lovet, and the famous James Sikes, known by the Name of the Hell and Fury Chairman, are to run for 100 Guineas the 31ſt Inſtant, on Banſtead Downes.

It is reported that the Bridge which is propoſed to be built over the Thames from Lambeth to Weſtminſter, is to conſiſt of 9 Arches, with a large Draw-Bridge in the Center, for the paſſing of the Weſt Country Barges. We hear Sir John Vanbrugh is to have the Direction for building the ſame.

A Tradeſman of Cannon-ſtreet, who ſome time ago ran away from the Statute, and left a young Wife and two ſmall Children in diſtreſsful Circumſtances, coming to Rotterdam, inſinuated himſelf into the Family of an eminent Burgher of that City, and courted his Daughter; when the Marriage was reſolved, all her Friends coming into it, and nothing was wanting but a Parſon, comes the Maſter of a Ship who knew him and diſcovered his Circumſtances to the honeſt Dutchman; who to be ſure of the Truth of the Maſter's Account of Things, ſent his own Siſter hither to find if he had a Wife living: The Dutch Woman came, and finding all true, embarked again for Rotterdam but a few Days ago, to confirm it, and prevent the Calamity that hung over the Family.

An eminent Merchant of this City, generally valued at One Hundred and Fifty Thouſand Pounds, is lately gone diſtracted, but on what Account is not fully known, though ſome attribute it to ſome domeſtick Uneaſineſſes.

A Bill is ordered to be brought in to repeal ſo much of the Quarentine Act, as gives Power to remove to a Ship, Lazaret, or Peſt houſe, any Perſon infected with the Plague, or healthy Perſons out of an infected Family, from their Habitations; and alſo ſo much of the ſaid Act as gives Power for the drawing of Lines round any City, Town, or Place infected.

Whereas there is a Paragraph of Home News inſerted in ſome of the London Journals publiſh'd laſt Saturday, reflecting on the Court Leet of Weſtminſter, and on Mr. Morice the High Bailiff; the Author of this Paper therefore thinks himſelf obliged, in Juſtice to the Perſons thereby injured, to make this publick Declaration, that the ſame happened thro' the Inadvertency of the Printer's Man, and without the Author's Knowledge, who, upon diſcovering it, immediately cauſed the ſame to be left out in the reſt of that Impreſſion: and that upon a ſtrict Enquiry, the ſaid Paragraph appears to be in every Article thereof, falſe, groundleſs, and malicious.

From Paris we have an Account, that an ignorant Surgeon, having some time since prick'd an Artery in a Boy's Arm, it mortify'd, and was therefore cut off above the Elbow. Hereupon an artificial Hand and Arm were made, and fix'd, so as to be useful on several Occasions, particularly it serves him to write with almost as well as his natural Arm. There is a Report here, that Commodore Matthews, who commanded the Squadron of Four Men of War that went to India to restore Bencolen, &c. and Sir Robert Johnson, one of the Captains under him, have fought a Duel in that Country: That the Latter was killed on the Spot, and that the Commodore died of his Wounds soon after: Also, that their two Lieutenants, who were their Seconds, were mortally wounded. This Account is said to come by the Way of Ostend. As it is Ship News it may be false, since we have often found that as little to be depended on as the Element through which it is conveyed: And as there is no Account of this as yet come to the Admiralty, it meets with but little Credit, and is thought to have obtained from a Misunderstanding, which it is reported there was between those two Gentlemen before they left England.
